It seems that every business has at least one workers compensation horror story about an employee who is a new hire or low in tenure that had a costly accident. If you look at your company's workers compensation loss runs, there is a good chance that you will find employees with less than two years' tenure account for 20% or more of your workers compensation total claim count and total cost. Moreover, many of these injuries may involve back injuries or muscle sprains and strains.

As America's economy recovers, businesses will need to hire more people to meet the demand for their products and services. Hiring the wrong people or improper onboarding of right people may result in higher workers compensation premiums for many years. To assist you in managing this exposure that can be costly to your business, Arthur J. Gallagher Risk Management Services, Inc. is offering a series of four free webcasts on Risk Management Strategies In a Recovering Economy.

The second webcast addresses how to avoid WC claims by implementing an Early Intervention Program. You want to attend this informative webcast if new hires or existing employees experience muscle sprain and strain injuries.
